For more than a quarter-century, audiences have trusted CNET to simplify the complicated and help them navigate a rapidly changing world driven by one core ingredient: technology. Today, CNET is a go-to destination for the news and advice that matters most in today's modern life: tech, money, wellness, culture, home, science and cars. Our experts are available to help you report on what’s happening, what's next and why it matters to your audiences. We are here to guide people to better futures - decoding complex ideas so they can make smarter, more informed decisions.

CNET Executives

Marc McCollum
President of Media and Commerce
Marc joined Red Ventures in 2018. In this role, Marc also has responsibility for the company’s strategic partnerships and investments in media, entertainment and consumer technology brands including CNET, GameSpot and ZDNet. More than 600 professionals in content strategy, development, production and publication work under Marc’s leadership.

Lindsey Turrentine
EVP, Content and Audience, CNET
Lindsey Turrentine is responsible for all content strategy and development at CNET. Under Turrentine’s 23 year tenure, CNET has expanded its news, commentary and reviews coverage to the breadth of things consumers care about (cars, money, culture, home) while enhancing its lead as the largest technology media brand in history. Lindsey also served as Vice President and Editor in Chief of CNET.com where she directed CNET’s industry-leading reviews, oversaw the rapid growth of video across platforms and set strategy for content that guides consumer purchase decisions.
